1 MR. BROWN: Sir, I don't have anything
2 further at this time, sir.

3 THE COURT: No.

4 MR. BUCKLEY: I don't have, Your Honour.

5 THE COURT: All right, thank you.

6 I have prepared a written decision that might 7 assist, and it is in the process now of putting the 8 finishing touches on and making copies. It will be 9 ready in about a half an hour. So what I am going 10 to do is I am going to stand this matter down for 11 about a half an hour, I will make that until 20 12 after 10:00, and I will return at that time and 13 deliver the decision.

14 I do not intend to read the decision verbatim 15 into the record, because it is 40 pages long, but 16 what I will do is I will highlight parts of the 17 decision and copies will be given to both counsel 18 and will be attached to the Court file as the 19 official decision of this Court with regards to the 20 matter before it.

21 All right.

22 MR. BROWN: Yes, sir.

23 MR. BUCKLEY: Thank you, Your Honour.

24 THE COURT: All right, very good.

25 MR. BROWN: Thank you, Your Honour.

26 THE COURT: We stand adjourned for a half 27 an hour.

1 THE COURT CLERK: Order in Court, all rise.

2 Court is adjourned for a brief period of time.

3 THE COURT: Thank you.

4 (ADJOURNMENT)

5 THE COURT CLERK: Calling the Synergy Group of 6 Canada Incorporated and TrueHope Nutritional Support
7 Limited.

8 THE COURT: First of all I would like to 9 thank counsel, both Mr. Brown on behalf of the Crown 10 and Mr. Buckley on behalf of the defendants for the 11 excellent work they did, both over the course of the 12 two to three week trial that was conducted in this 13 matter and in the arguments that were presented to 14 the Court with regards to the issues. It was 15 apparent that the work was thoroughly researched, 16 the cases were thoroughly prepared and the case was 17 very well presented. So thank you both, gentlemen, 18 for the work that you have done on this matter.

19 As I stated earlier, I have a written decision 20 which taken down from double spaced is only 29 and 21 not 40 pages, so it will be a little lighter reading 22 than you might have initially thought. Nonetheless, 23 I do not propose to read the entire decision into 24 the record. The original of the decision has been 25 signed and will be attached to the Court record, I 26 have copies for Crown and defence counsel, and in 27 due course the decision will be available on the 1 Alberta Justice website.

2 However, the issues that were raised and the 3 circumstances of this case were complex and unique 4 and I'm going to take some time now to review and to 5 summarize the decision so that people here have the 6 benefit of hearing first hand of how the facts and 7 evidence were considered by the Court and the 8 arguments that were made and the decisions that I 9 have arrived at.

10 By way of background, and I would think that 11 most of you are very aware of the story, but I am 12 going to touch on a number of matters that you have 13 heard before, but I think are relevant to the 14 outline of the summary of this decision.

15 Mr. Stephan and Mr. Hardy are the principals of 16 the defendants, TrueHope and Synergy, and Mr.
17 Stephan had lost his wife to bi-polar disorder 18 through suicide and two of his children were 19 apparently suffering from the same disorder. He 20 spoke with Mr. Hardy who had experience in the 21 livestock feed business, and they came up with the 22 idea that perhaps a vitamin mineral supplement used 23 with pigs to reduce rage and aggressive behaviour 24 might be of some assistance in dealing with Mr.
25 Stephan's children.

26 So they tried this and within a few weeks there 27 were observable improvements, initially in his son's

1 behaviour and then with regards to his daughter.
2 Over the next while other persons started taking the 3 supplement for depression or bi-polar disorder, with 4 significant results and Synergy was incorporated as 5 a research company.

6 Over the next several years the significant 7 results of treating depression and bi-polar disorder 8 with vitamin mineral supplements, rather than 9 conventional pharmaceutical treatments attracted 10 interest from potential patients and experts in the 11 field of depression and bi-polar disorder, both in 12 Canada and the United States.

13 By 2002/2003, Synergy, the research
14 organization was raising funds and TrueHope was 15 running a support program required for the product, 16 which over time had become more refined and was 17 known as EMpowerplus. There were approximately 18 3,000 people across Canada participating in the use
19 of the supplement and the TrueHope Support Program, 20 and the program administered a 24 hour a day -- was 21 administered on a 24 hour a day basis with call 22 takers assisting in the screening, monitoring and 23 support of participants in the program.

24 By 2002 the defendants had attracted the 25 attention of Health Canada, since the defendants 26 made claims that EMpowerplus was used for the 27 treatment of depression and bi-polar disorder,

1 Health Canada took the position that this brought 2 the supplement within the meaning of the definition 3 of a drug within the Food and Drugs Act and 4 Regulations, even though the product was a vitamin 5 mineral supplement.

6 There were discussions in which Health Canada
7 suggested, representatives of Health Canada, 8 suggested that the product couldn't be sold without 9 a drug identification number or a DIN. However, in 10 order to get a DIN the product would be required to 11 undergo extensive testing designed for drugs or 12 pharmaceuticals and which process was not suited 13 towards health food products or vitamin mineral 14 supplements. The drug testing regime in the normal 15 course, one or two active ingredients would be 16 tested, but with a vitamin mineral supplement such 17 as EMpowerplus had approximately 24 ingredients.

18 There was expert evidence at trial that it 19 would have been impossible for the defendants to 20 obtain a drug identification number for the 21 supplement.

22 In any event, in June 2002 the defendants wrote 23 to Health Canada expressing their concerns that 24 Health Canada may require a DIN for the supplement, 25 and looking for a resolution to the problem. The 26 defendants referred to new legislation being 27 developed for health food products and the

1 encouraging finding of medical professionals who 2 patients were using the supplement and were involved
3 in the TrueHope program. The defendants provided 4 testimonials on letters from over 200 supporters at 5 that time.

6 Mor importantly, the defendants requested a 7 dialogue with Health Canada to work with the 8 defendants for a resolution such as a Ministerial 9 exemption, or an agreement for the continuance of 10 the sale and distribution of the supplement and the 11 operation of the program. The defendants at that 12 time, this was June of 2003, repeated earlier 13 requests for a meeting with the Minister of Health.

14 A meeting did occur in mid January 2003 in 15 Burnaby with representatives of Health Canada where 16 the defendants pleaded their case to continue the 17 sale and distribution of the supplement and 18 specifically asked for a Ministerial exemption. The 19 defendants claim to have contacted Health Canada and 20 the office of the Minister of Health on numerous 21 occasions and numerous instances, but have not 22 received any responses.

23 According to the defendants, who were seeking 24 to remain in compliance with the requirements of 25 Health Canada, the options available to the 26 defendants arising from the meeting with Health 27 Canada were either stop selling the supplement until

1 they obtained a DIN, which Health Canada knew they 2 could not do, or leave the country and move to the 3 United States.

4 The defendants continued to request meetings by 5 correspondence and telephone with the Minister of 6 Health, but none were forthcoming. In early March 7 2003 the defendants again wrote to Health Canada and 8 the Minister of Health outlining their concerns and 9 asking for a response to their written inquiries
10 from June of 2002.

11 However by the end of March Health Canada had 12 already issued directions to Canada Customs to stop 13 all shipments of the supplement from the United 14 States into Canada.

15 There was panic and confusion amongst the 16 participants in the TrueHope Program, Health
17 Canada's response was to set up a 1-800 crisis line 18 which callers were advised that they should go see a 19 psychiatrist.

20 In April 2003 the defendants wrote to Health
21 Canada warning Health Canada of serious risk of harm 22 and possible deaths by suicide from Health Canada's 23 actions. Numerous previous warnings had been 24 expressed in writing to Health Canada, but the 25 seizures continued.

26 In the meantime Canadian citizens took to 27 smuggling the supplement into Canada for their own

1 health and for the health, safety and well being of 2 their family members. The defendants continued to 3 take orders for the supplement and to maintain the 4 TrueHope support program, which was essential to the 5 safe and effective use of the supplement.

6 This conduct by the defendants was contrary to 7 the direction from Health Canada that since Health
8 Canada had determined the supplement was a drug, it 9 was not to be sold without a DIN. A DIN which was 10 impossible to obtain.

11 The defendants pressed on with their efforts, 12 in addition to phone calls and faxes and 13 correspondence, attempts to meet with the Minister, 14 attempts to meet with representatives of Health 15 Canada. They also went to Court in May of 2003 to 16 the Federal Court of Canada in an attempt to 17 challenge the seizure actions being taken by Health 18 Canada and Canada Customs.

19 In June of 2003 a group of women known as the 20 Red Umbrellas gathered on Parliament Hill, they were 21 either members of the TrueHope Program or had family 22 members associated with the program. They were 23 protesting the lack of response from Health Canada 24 to their concerns for their well being or for the 25 well being of their family members and for other 26 persons taking the supplement and being supported 27 through the TrueHope Program.

1           In July 2003, they also protested Health 2           Canada's conduct at the constituency office of the 3           Minister of Health in Edmonton. No direct response 4           was forthcoming from the Minister of Health or 5           representatives of Health Canada. However, in July 6           2003 Health Canada executed a search warrant against 7           the business premises of the defendants.

8           The defendants pressed on looking for legal 9           resolutions and in September 2003 they challenged 10          the validity of the search warrant and sought the 11          return of all goods that had been seized pursuant to 12          the search warrant.

13          At the same time that this was going on the 14          Minister of Health in 1998 and 1999 had accepted 53
15          recommendations from a Standing Committee on Health, 16          many of which dealt with the natural health food
17          products industry. There was developing legislation 18          in which Health Canada itself recognized that the 19          therapeutic products directorate and the drug 20          testing regime or process was not suited to the 21          health food industry and legislation had been 22          developed and was making its way through Parliament
23          that would amend the legislation to provide for a 24          natural health products directorate and a different 25          form of testing regime. And in the course of 2003 26          there was a transition team in place and this new 27          directorate was in the process of being set up.

1           The new legislation and regulations was 2           gazetted to come into force on the 1st of January of 3           2004. That is a relevant backdrop to the 4           circumstances that the defendants found themselves 5           in, because they were hopeful that under a new 6           regime their product, EMpowerplus or a similar 7           product would be readily approved. Certainly they 8           were not up against the impossible situation of 9           trying to get a drug identification number for a 10          vitamin mineral supplement under a drug testing 11          regime.

12           It is also significant that in early 2004, in 13          March of 2004, after the federal election in 14          December of 2003, a new Minister of Health entered 15          into an agreement or made an agreement that in 16          effect exempted the defendants from the application
17          of the regulation, the DIN regulation and permitted 18          the defendants to continue to sell and distribute 19          the supplement and to operate the TrueHope Program, 20          and that agreement remains effective today, and my 21          understanding from the evidence at trial was that 22          the defendants continue to operate under that 23          agreement today, with the approval of Health Canada.

24           Regardless of the foregoing, in particular the 25          new regime and the agreement with the Minister, in 26          May of 2004 Health Canada instituted six charges 27          against the defendants for breach of the Food and

1 Drug Act and Regulations, from January 1st, 2003 to 2 December 31st, 2003. At the commencement of this 3 trial the Crown entered stays of proceedings on five 4 out of six charges and proceeded on only one Count,
5 that is Count number 3, which is unlawfully selling 6 a drug for which a drug identification number had 7 not been assigned. This offence carries a maximum 8 penalty on summary conviction for a first offence of 9 a fine not exceeding $500 or to imprisonment not 10 exceeding three months or to both, and the Crown 11 conceded at the outset of the trial that in the 12 event of conviction the Crown was only seeking a 13 fine.

14 The offence charged is a strict liability 15 offence and the Crown has proven the actus reus of 16 the offence. On the evidence the defendants were 17 selling a drug as defined in the Food and Drugs Act
18 and Regulations without a drug identification
19 number. This finding is based on the documentary 20 evidence admitted as part of the Crown's case, the 21 evidence of the Crown's witnesses, and the evidence 22 and admissions of Mr. Stephan and Mr. Hardy on 23 behalf of the defendants.

24 This case is one of whether or not one or more 25 of the defences claimed by the defendants is 26 available to them. The defendants have argued for 27 the defence of necessity, the defence of due

1 diligence and for a stay of proceedings based on 2 abuse of process.

3 The evidence presented by both Health Canada
4 and the defendants was credible, with no significant 5 inconsistencies or contradictions and has been 6 accepted subject to the further comments I will make 7 in this analysis. In particular, the expert
8 evidence presented by the defendants, Dr. Charles 9 Popper, psychiatrist at Harvard University, Dr.
10 Bonnie Kaplan, psychologist at the University of 11 Calgary, and Mr. Bruce Dales, a consultant on drug 12 approval process and classification of substances
13 under the Food and Drug Act and Regulations.

14 The expert evidence was clear and persuasive in 15 support of the defendants and not significantly 16 affected by cross-examination. Also the evidence of 17 numerous witnesses called by the defendants on the 18 effects of the supplement on their lives or on the 19 lives of their family members and the effects of 20 actions or the lack of action by Health Canada was 21 compelling and persuasive.

22 There are four issues in this case, first are 23 either or both the defendants a manufacturer within 24 the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act and 25 Regulations. Secondly, are the defendants entitled 26 to the defence of necessity, thirdly, are the 27 defendants entitled to a defence of due diligence,

1 and fourthly, was the conduct of Health Canada an 2 abuse of process sufficient to justify a stay of 3 proceedings.

4 The first issue or argument that was presented 5 by the defence dealt with the meaning of 6 manufacturer within the Food and Drug Act and 7 Regulations, and the argument was that since another 8 company was a holder of the trademark during the 9 relevant charge period in 2003, that the defendants 10 could not be found to be manufacturers and therefore 11 selling in contravention of the regulation.

12 The plain meaning of the definition of 13 manufacturer in the regulations contemplates two 14 different categories of persons. In one case a 15 person, including an association or partnership, who 16 under their own name sells a food or drug. Or in 17 the other case, a person who under a trade, design, 18 wordmark, trademark or other name or wordmark 19 controlled by them sells a food or drug. On the 20 evidence presented at the trial the Crown has proven 21 beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants were 22 manufacturers who under their own name sold the 23 vitamin mineral supplement known as EMpowerplus.
24 This was more of a technical argument based upon the 25 wording of the definition, but in any event, I'm 26 satisfied that the defendants are included in the 27 plain meaning of that definition.

1           The substantive arguments in this case dealt 2 with the defence of necessity, the defence of due 3 diligence and an abuse of process.

4           With regards to the defence of necessity the 5 onus of proof is on the Crown throughout. There is 6 an evidentiary burden on the defendants to place 7 sufficient evidence before the Court to raise the 8 defence, however once there is sufficient evidence 9 before the Court, the defence of necessity is raised
10 and the Crown has the burden to prove beyond a 11 reasonable doubt that the defendants were not acting 12 out of necessity. There is no onus of proof on the 13 defendants.

14           Counsel for the defence referred to R v. Perka, 15 and some of the comments of Mr. Justice Dixon. One 16 of the characteristics of a defence of necessity 17 involves voluntariness and in describing 18 voluntariness, Justice Dixon said as follows:

20           The criterium is the moral 21           involuntariness of the wrongful 22           action.

23
24           And then further:

25
26           This involuntariness is measured on 27           the basis of society's expectation of 1           appropriate and normal resistance to 2           pressure.

3

4           The Supreme Court of Canada went further in 5           describing the defence of necessity, it said:

6

7           It rests on a realistic assessment of 8           human weakness, recognizing that a 9           liberal and humane criminal law
10          cannot hold people to the strict 11          obedience of laws in emergency 12          situations where normal human 13          instincts, whether of self 14          preservation or of altruism
15          overwhelming impel disobedience.

17          The defendants maintain that they were in a 18          situation of emergency and were compelled by normal 19          human instincts to disobey the regulation in order 20          to protect others from harm.

22          The defence of necessity has three elements, 23          these elements include that there must be imminent
24          peril or danger, that there must be no reasonable 25          legal alternative, and that there must be 26          proportionality with regards to the harm inflicted 27          and the harm avoided.

27

          The Supreme Court of Canada in R v. Latimer

1 described the perfect case that I have just 2 mentioned as being the leading case on the defence 3 of necessity, and it is important to appreciate as 4 well that the Court approved a statement that it is 5 well established law that the defence of necessity 6 must be of limited application.

7 In any event, in dealing with the defence of 8 necessity the first two elements that I have 9 described, the test to determine -- to make a 10 determination is one called the modified objective 11 standard, whereas the proportionality test has to be 12 made on a completely objective basis.

13 The modified objective standard basically means 14 that, and I will quote from one of the cases here:

15
16 That that standard will take into 17 account the particular circumstances
18 of the accused, including his or her 19 ability to perceive the existence of 20 alternative courses of action.

22 So dealing first with the element of imminent 23 peril or danger. The evidence presented by the 24 defendants was credible and compelling with regards
25 to imminent peril or danger. Mr. Stephan testified 26 that individuals who came to the defendants for 27 assistance were often the most severe cases to whom

1 EMpowerplus and the TrueHope Program were the last 2 resort. He has had first hand personal experiences 3 with the ravages of depression and bi-polar 4 disorder. He has also had personal experience with 5 the dangers associated with removing individuals 6 from the supplement, and his evidence was that when 7 the supplement was removed an individual regressed 8 very rapidly, and within a matter of a few days to 9 aggressiveness, violent behaviour, mood swings and 10 also the possibility of suicide quickly returned.

11 His evidence in this regard was supported by 12 the personal and testimonial evidence of Ms.
13 Coulson, Stringam, Ms. Oxby and Ms. Stanley, who all 14 testified that the symptoms of -- the negative 15 symptoms associated with depression, bi-polar 16 disorder, rapidly returned when the supplement was 17 not taken. This effect was also observed by Dr.
18 Bonnie Kaplan, psychologist at the University of 19 Calgary who had been conducting case studies in the 20 use of the supplement before her work was shut down 21 by Health Canada.

22 There is expert and objective evidence from Dr.
23 Charles Popper, psychiatrist at Harvard University,
24 who also taught other psychiatrists. He testified 25 that when the treatment was withdrawn the symptoms 26 returned. His expert evidence was that if the 27 supplement became unavailable, symptoms associated

1 with depression and bi-polar disorder, which would 2 include aggressive behaviour, assaults,
3 hospitalizations and suicides would return.

4 There is also evidence from Ron LaJeunesse of 5 the Canadian Mental Health Association, of his grave 6 concerns with the conduct of Health Canada in 7 preventing the supplement would result in suicides.

8 The evidence presented by the defendants 9 establishes that the defendants believed that the 10 persons in the TrueHope Program were in imminent 11 peril or danger if they no longer had access to the 12 supplement or to the TrueHope Program. And the 13 Court is satisfied that this was a reasonably held 14 belief.

15 The Crown argued on the other hand that there 16 was no imminent peril or danger and argued the case
17 of R v. Morgantaler, which was a decision 20 years
18 ago in first of all in the Ontario Court of Appeal 19 and then in the Supreme Court of Canada. And in 20 dealing with imminent harm or danger the response of 21 an individual was described as having to be an 22 uncalculating response essential to involuntary 23 conduct.

24 And the Crown argued that since the conduct in 25 this case was planned and deliberate, disregarding 26 Health Canada's directions, that the conduct was not 27 involuntary.

1           However, the grounding of a ship after 2           mechanical problems and deteriorating weather was 3           found to be imminent peril or danger, even though 4           the time frame involved could not be said to be 5           immediate, that was R v. Perka, the act of smuggling 6           heroine under threats of harm to a family member was 7           not immediate in the sense of immediate time frame, 8           yet the Supreme Court of Canada allowed the common-9           law defence of duress in R v. Ruzic.

10           This Court finds that the return of 11           devastating, possibly life threatening behaviours 12           within a few days constituted imminent harm or 13           danger that the defendants reasonably believed was 14           unavoidable if access was prevented to the 15           supplement and the program.

16           Regarding the argument that the defendant's 17           conduct was planned and deliberate, the actions of 18           the accused persons in both R v. Perka and R v.
19           Ruzic, were also planned and deliberate, yet the 20           Supreme Court of Canada found that the accused 21           persons in those cases were entitled to the defences 22           of necessity and duress respectively.

23           Involuntariness means moral involuntariness. And 24           this Court is satisfied that the defendants have 25           presented sufficient evidence, applying the modified 26           objective test, to establish that their conduct in 27           disobeying the DIN regulation was in this sense

1 involuntary.

2 The Crown also argued the case of R v. Krieger, 3 the medical marijuana case and in that case the 4 Courts found that there was no air of reality to the 5 defence of necessity.

6 In this case I have found that there is an air 7 of reality to the defence of necessity, sufficient
8 to require the Crown to prove beyond a reasonable 9 doubt that one or more of the requirements of the 10 defence was not satisfied.

11 The Crown argued that the defendants themselves 12 were not facing imminent peril or danger, however 13 the law is clear that it's not just the defendants, 14 but the protection of the defence of necessity 15 extends to the protection of other people from harm, 16 and that's R v. Perka.

17 So with regards to imminent peril or danger, 18 that element of the defence of necessity, I am 19 satisfied that the defendants have presented 20 sufficient evidence to place the onus on the Crown 21 to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that this element 22 did not exist.

23 The Crown, in my decision, the Crown has failed 24 to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the 25 defendant's conduct, viewed through a modified,
26 objective standard was not involuntary in the sense 27 of moral involuntariness. The defendants were

1           overwhelmingly compelled to disobey the DIN
2           regulation in order to protect the health, safety 3           and well being of the users of the supplement and 4           the support program.

5           The second element with regards to the defence
6           of necessity is no reasonable legal alternative, 7           that the defendants has no reasonable, legal 8           alternative, but to conduct themselves the way they 9           did.

10          Once again, this is the modified objective test 11          that takes into account the situation and 12          characteristics of the defendants. And the test is 13          also whether they were reasonable legal 14          alternatives, not whether there were any 15          alternatives.

16          The alternative set out by Health Canada was 17          that they just -- the defendants just stop selling 18          the product in 2003 and the defendants have said
19          this was not a reasonable legal alternative. There 20          were people involved in taking the supplement since 21          1996, these people were dependent upon the 22          supplement and on the TrueHope Support Program and 23          against the backdrop of a transitional regulatory 24          scheme, it was in the view of the defendants, not a 25          reasonable legal alternative to stop selling the 26          product, particularly when considering the 27          significant harm and danger that would arise to 1 participants in the program.

2 Dr. Popper, whom I have previously referred to,
3 gave evidence on behalf of the defendants supporting 4 the defendants' contention that this was the only 5 program of its kind at the time, and that only the 6 defendants had the expertise to effectively screen
7 and monitor participants in the program. Dr. Popper
8 also testified that he learned from the defendants 9 how to manage the transition for individuals on 10 medications to the supplement.

11 So the defendants argued that with 12 approximately 3,000 participants effectively using 13 the supplement and the TrueHope Program in 2003, 14 that with the harm that these individuals faced if 15 denied access to the supplement or the support 16 program, with the regulatory regime undergoing a 17 state of transition, in all of those circumstances 18 there was no reasonable legal alternative but to 19 consider selling the supplement and maintaining the 20 support program.

21 In the arguments of both the Crown and the 22 defence, a number of alternatives were proposed that 23 could or could not be considered to be reasonable 24 legal alternatives. I have just addressed that the 25 defendants did not believe that stopping selling the 26 supplement was a reasonable legal alternative.

27 One alternative was that the defendants could

1 get a drug identification number for the product.
2 This was not a reasonable legal alternative because 3 the evidence at trial was clear that it was not 4 possible to get a drug identification number for 5 this product.

6 Another alternative was to negotiate with 7 Health Canada, and I am satisfied on the evidence 8 that the defendants made numerous efforts to meet 9 with Health Canada to work out a resolution to this 10 developing problem. Health Canada's response when 11 the seizures of the product, of the supplement, at 12 the border started, was to establish a 1-800 crisis
13 line, which received over a 1,000 telephone calls 14 and the callers were advised to go see their 15 psychiatrist. It should be obvious from that, that 16 Health Canada recognized that there was potential 17 harm that could accrue to the users of the 18 supplement.

19 And just on that point, there was evidence at 20 trial as well that going to a psychiatrist and 21 taking pharmaceutical medications for the treatment 22 of depression and bi-polar disorder was seen by many 23 not to be a reasonable alternative. However that 24 was the advice by Health Canada.

25 Another alternative was that the defendants
26 could obtain a Ministerial exemption. They made 27 numerous efforts to meet with the Minister to try to 1 obtain a Ministerial exemption in 2002 and in 2003.

2 They made numerous telephone calls, they wrote
3 letters, they went to Ottawa, they supported
4 protests on Parliament Hill, they appeared before
5 the Standing Committee on Health, they worked with a 6 Member of Parliament developing a private members
7 bill to change the definition of the Food and Drug 8 Act to allow the supplement to be sold as a food, 9 not as a drug. There was a rally at the Minister of 10 Health's office in Edmonton. All of these efforts 11 undertaken by the defendants to meet with 12 representatives of Health Canada and to meet with 13 the Minister of Health to make their case for an 14 agreement or a Ministerial exemption were apparently 15 ignored or disregarded.

16 The only alternative proposed by Health Canada 17 besides to stop selling the supplement was for the 18 defendants to leave the Country and go to the United 19 States.

20 Now there is more than one way to look at this 21 particular alternative that was proposed by 22 representatives of Health Canada. But I will only 23 address the defendants' reaction. And the 24 defendants' reaction was that they took this 25 alternative seriously, that they considered it, but 26 that there were numerous problems with it. First of 27 all they did not know if the United States would

1 allow them to emigrate or get working Visas in order
2 to carry on their business there, and they did not 3 have the financial resources in order to move their 4 businesses and their families to the United States.

5 The only evidence presented by the Crown was 6 that at one time the supplement had been provided 7 through a corporate agent in the United States, but 8 the circumstances regarding that relationship and 9 its viability was not clearly established in 10 evidence by the Crown. Leaving the country was not 11 a reasonable legal alternative.

12 Another possible suggestion by the Crown was 13 that the defendants somehow direct the users of the 14 supplement to make their own product with off the 15 shelf products. This is not a reasonable legal 16 alternative in dealing with 3,000 participants 17 attempting to obtain the supplement and to have 18 access to the TrueHope Support Program to assist 19 them in dealing with their mental health issues.
20 The product would not be consistent, there would be 21 no knowledge of who was necessarily on the program 22 and how to assist them. There would be questions as 23 well about the viability of maintaining the support 24 program. It is not a reasonable legal alternative.

25 A further alternative was to employ the 26 personal use exemption. There is insufficient 27 evidence before the Court on the effectiveness of 1           this exemption and whether or not the support

2           program could have been maintained under such a
3           scheme as well. There was evidence of inconsistent 4           application of the exemption and there was evidence
5           before the Court that attempts to use the exemption 6           still resulted in seizures at the border. So that 7           was not a reasonable legal alternative.

8           Counsel for the defendants also argued that the 9           defendants were under a duty or duties as described 10          in Section 216 and 217 of the Criminal Code, to 11          continue to provide the supplement and to maintain 12          the support program or face the consequences of 13          being charged with criminal negligence. The 14          defendants provided several cases in this regard.
15          Now I will address that particular argument later.
16          There are certain factors that deal with the 17          possibility of a charge of criminal negligence that 18          I will address later in this decision.

19          Another alternative, while I am talking about 20          reasonable legal alternatives, was to obtain an 21          agreement with the Minister of Health to permit the 22          supplement to be brought into Canada. Given the 23          conduct of Health Canada officials and the Minister 24          of Health in 2003, this was not a reasonable legal 25          alternative at the time. It is noteworthy, however, 26          that by March of 2004 it was and an agreement was 27          made with the new Minister of Health.

1           This agreement is evidence that by early 2004
2 the Minister of Health thought that there was no 3 other reasonable legal alternative for resolving the 4 supply of the supplement and the operation of the 5 TrueHope Support Program and this agreement remains 6 in affect today.

7           So I have found that the defendants took 8 numerous steps to seek a resolution of the problem, 9 the defendants considered or attempted numerous 10 alternatives regarding how to continue the supply of 11 the supplement and to maintain the support program 12 without running afoul of the existing legislation 13 and Health Canada.

14           The Crown on the other hand argued that there
15 were reasonable alternatives, legal alternatives.
16 The Crown argued that economics was not a defence.
17 However, the evidence led by the defendants 18 established that the business of the defendants was 19 more than just selling the supplement, but included 20 a vital and essential support program. The 21 defendants provided financial means for persons who 22 were not able to afford to go on the program. The 23 defendants' evidence was clear and credible that 24 their business was never about earning a profit, but 25 in developing and delivering a vitamin mineral 26 supplement and support program that provided a 27 viable alternative to conventional treatment for

1 depression and bi-polar disorder.

2 The supplement and the support program were and 3 are inextricably connected.

4 The Crown suggested the off the shelf
5 alternative, and I have already addressed that, that 6 that in my view, was not a reasonable legal 7 alternative. But it also suggests as well that the 8 Crown did not consider that the vitamin mineral 9 supplement itself was harmful, it also casts doubt 10 on the assertion that Health Canada had concerns for 11 the safety of the supplement if they are making the 12 suggestion either use the personal use exemption or 13 make the product yourself off the shelf.

14 This argument also disregards the necessity of 15 the TrueHope Program and disregards the fact that 16 the product, the supplement, must be controlled and 17 managed through that program. It is not a 18 reasonable legal alternative to somehow suggest that 19 people make their own and are somehow going to be 20 maintained on a support program.

21 The Crown also suggested that it was a 22 reasonable alternative for the defendants to remove 23 Boron or Germanium from the supplement. However 24 this argument only goes so far as to state that 25 these were Health Canada concerns. There is no
26 evidence before the Court that the removal of either 27 or both of these ingredients would have resulted in

1           obtaining a DIN or would have prevented the 2           enforcement actions taken by Health Canada. In 3           fact, the evidence was that regardless, the 4           defendants were not going to get a DIN.

5           Another argument that the Crown made was that 6           it would have been a reasonable legal alternative 7           for the defendants to stop making treatment claims.
8           Again, there is no evidence that if the defendants 9           modified or stopped their treatment claims that this 10          would have resulted in the defendants obtaining a 11          DIN or would have resulted in the cessation of 12          enforcement proceedings. However there was evidence 13          that the defendants sought to obtain advice from 14          Health Canada regarding amendments or modifications 15          to their website but that no such assistance was 16          forthcoming.

17          Another course of action suggested by the Crown 18          as a reasonable legal alternative was that the 19          defendants could have sold their rights in the 20          supplement to a company in the United States and 21          negotiated a contractual relationship for a 22          percentage of profits to continue the support
23          program. And the Crown pointed to the fact that a 24          relationship had existed with a corporation called 25          Evince in the United States until 2002.

26          I have found that there is not sufficient 27          evidence before the Court of the details of the past

1 relationship with Evince, or why that relationship
2 ended. There is also insufficient evidence before 3 the Court to determine if it was indeed possible to 4 sell rights in the supplement to a company in the 5 United States and be able to negotiate a contractual 6 relationship for a financial percentage to continue
7 the support program.

8 Applying the modified objective test I must 9 consider whether or not reasonable legal 10 alternatives existed, taking into account the 11 perception, experiences and circumstances of the 12 defendants. The evidence established that the 13 defendants considered and attempted to find a number 14 of alternatives. The defendants believed that to 15 protect the participants in the TrueHope Program
16 from harm there was no reasonable legal alternative 17 but to disobey the DIN regulation. This was a 18 reasonably held belief.

19 The Crown has failed to prove beyond a 20 reasonable doubt, based on the modified objective 21 test, that there were reasonable legal alternatives 22 available to the defendants.

23 The third part of the test of necessity or 24 defence of necessity is proportionality, and this is 25 an objective test. The Court clearly stated in 26 Latimer, R v. Latimer, that the evaluation of the 27 seriousness of the harms must be objective.

1           The harm that the defendant sought to avoid was 2           the rapid return of symptoms associated with 3           depression and bi-polar disorder, which could result 4           in aggressive behaviour, assaults, hospitalizations 5           and suicides. The alternative of being placed under 6           psychiatric care with regular interviews and 7           medications that had serious side effects was also a 8           harm that the defendants sought to avoid. The 9           defendants in argument characterized the harm to be 10          avoided as being the most serious harm of all, that 11          is serious incapacitation and possibly death due to 12          mental illness.

13           There was ample evidence presented from both 14          ordinary and expert witnesses that the symptoms
15          associated with depression and bi-polar disorder
16          returned rapidly, within the matter of a few days.

17           There was expert evidence before the Court as 18          well, from Dr. Kaplan, who observed the rapid return 19          of symptoms once the supplement was discontinued.
20          And Dr. Charles Popper, who I have referred to 21          earlier, who testified that if the supplement was 22          unavailable there would be aggressive behaviour, 23          assaults, hospitalizations, incarcerations and 24          death.

25           The defendants argued that there was no harm in 26          not having a DIN since 90 percent of the health, the 27          natural health product industry, is not in

1 compliance. There was also an interim DIN directive
2 by Health Canada that exempted products. There was 3 a new regulatory regime under the Natural Health
4 Products Regulations that was being developed.
5 Health Canada itself classified the product as type 6 2, meaning that the risk of health consequences was 7 remote, and Health Canada itself was prepared to 8 allow the purchase of the supplement under the 9 personal use exemption, and ultimately the Minister 10 of Health in 2004 agreed to the sale and 11 distribution of the supplement and the operation of 12 the program in an arrangement that continues to 13 operate to the present day.

14 So on a purely objective basis, based upon the 15 evidence of ordinary witnesses and expert witnesses, 16 the harm sought to be avoided to the thousands of 17 participants in the TrueHope Program was significant 18 and severe. The existence of this harm was not 19 seriously questioned by the Crown, and any possible 20 harm from the use of the supplement appears to be of 21 little concern to Health Canada.

22 The Crown argued that the Court should take 23 into account the bigger picture, that is the 24 importance of the regulatory system in order to 25 govern the conduct of people in businesses in 26 Canada. And referred to the R v. Wholesale Group 27 case and that the ability of government effectively

1 to regulate potential harmful conduct must be 2 maintained.

3 The Crown argued that the purpose of the DIN 4 was to protect the public from a company or 5 companies who would develop a drug and place it on 6 the market without going through the testing
7 requirements of an appropriate regulatory body.

8 In assessing the harm inflicted on the 9 regulatory process it is important to note a couple 10 of things. One is that the DIN was a requirement
11 relating to drugs under the Therapeutic Products 12 Directorate, primarily related to pharmaceuticals.
13 The regulatory process itself was in a state of 14 transition while the new Natural Health Products
15 Directorate was coming into place.

16 Also the Minister of Health in 2004 sought to 17 enter into an agreement to permit the sale and 18 distribution of the product and the support program.

19 Health Canada itself considered the product a 20 type 2 category, which meant the risk of serious
21 consequences was remote. Health Canada itself
22 recommended that the product could still be obtained 23 under the personal use exemption. The legislation 24 itself provided for a maximum $500 fine on first 25 offence summary conviction or imprisonment or both.

26 In these circumstances little harm would have 27 been inflicted on the regulatory process. So on a

1 purely objective basis the harm inflicted in the 2 circumstances of this case was insignificant when 3 compared to the harm avoided. The harm avoided was 4 clearly and unquestionably greater than the harm 5 inflicted. And we are referring to a regulatory 6 process that was in transition and changing and was 7 about to change to recognize a new product, and so 8 the harm in my view, to the regulatory process, is 9 minimal in the circumstances of this particular 10 case.

11 The onus was on the Crown throughout the trial
12 to prove the case against the defendants beyond a 13 reasonable doubt. Since sufficient evidence was 14 presented by the defendants to raise the defence of 15 necessity, the onus was on the Crown to disprove the 16 defence of necessity beyond a reasonable doubt. To 17 do so the Crown had to establish beyond a reasonable 18 doubt that one of the elements of requirements of 19 the defence of necessity has not been met. On my 20 analysis the Crown has failed to satisfy the burden 21 of proof and the defendants are entitled to the 22 defence of necessity.

23 Turning now to the defence of due diligence, 24 the offence for which the defendants stand charged 25 under the Food and Drugs Act and Regulations is a 26 strict liability offence. The leading case of R v.
27 Sault St. Marie describes a strict liability offence

1 and the defence of due diligence as follows:

2
3 For this type of offence there is no
4 necessity for the prosecution to 5 prove the existence of a mens rea or 6 mental element of the offence. All 7 the Crown has to do is prove the 8 actus reus, which is that the acts
9 occurred, and then what that leaves
10 open to a defendant to avoid 11 liability is to prove that the 12 defendant took all reasonable care.

14 As stated by the Court in R v. Sault St. Marie, 15 the accused to avoid liability must prove that he 16 took all reasonable care, and this involves 17 consideration of what a reasonable man would have 18 done in the circumstances. The onus in this case is 19 different than the defence of necessity where the 20 onus was on the Crown beyond a reasonable doubt.
21 The onus with regards to the defence of due 22 diligence is on the defendants on a balance of 23 probabilities, to satisfy the Court that the 24 defendants took all reasonable care in the 25 circumstances.

26 Some of the comments I am about to make will 27 overlap on comments I have already made with regards

1 to whether or not there were any reasonable legal 2 alternatives.

3 First of all there was evidence before the 4 Court that it would have been impossible, expert 5 evidence before the Court that it would have been 6 impossible to obtain a drug identification number.
7 Not only was there expert evidence to this affect, 8 but also that this was known to representatives of 9 Health Canada, although they were not forthcoming in 10 telling the defendants that they were not going to 11 get a DIN. This is also supported by the 12 experiences and dealings that Dr. Kaplan had with 13 representatives of Health Canada when they stopped, 14 when Health Canada stopped the clinical trials that 15 she was attempting to conduct.

16 So what would a reasonable man have done in the 17 circumstances? Well a reasonable man would have 18 tried to obtain a Ministerial exemption or to reach 19 an agreement with Health Canada to permit the 20 continued sale of the supplement and the maintenance 21 of the support program while the new natural health 22 products regime was scheduled to come into force on 23 the 1st of January, 2004.

24 The defendants made considerable efforts to 25 bring to the attention of Health Canada the 26 seriousness of the actions of stopping the 27 supplement at the border. They also made

1 considerable efforts to meet with the 2 representatives of Health Canada and to the Minister 3 of Health.

4 As stated earlier, there were protests on 5 Parliament Hill, there were questions raised by 6 Members of Parliament in the House of Commons, there 7 was a private members bill sponsored by I believe 8 Dr. Lunney, in order to amend the definition. There
9 was a rally at the office of the Minister of Health 10 in Edmonton, and all of these efforts made by the 11 defendants during 2003 were unsuccessful in 12 obtaining a meeting with the Minister or a 13 Ministerial exemption or agreement that was being 14 sought by the defendants, so that they would not as 15 I have said, run afoul of the Food and Drug Act and 16 Regulations.

17 It is noteworthy as well that the eventual 18 solution that was available was through the next 19 Minister of Health in March of 2004, which was an 20 agreement to permit the sale and distribution of the 21 supplement and the operation of the program, and as 22 I have said earlier and as I will say again, I have 23 found that this agreement by the Minister of Health 24 in March of 2004 is evidence of what would be 25 expected of a reasonable person in the 26 circumstances.

27 Besides the matters that I have just referred

1 to there were other actions taken by the defendants 2 that would be considered reasonable and fall into 3 the category of taking all reasonable care to 4 comply. The defendants took legal proceedings in 5 Federal Court of Canada to try to prevent the 6 stoppages of the supplement. The had to take action 7 in the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta in 8 September with regards to the search warrant.

9 The Court has found that the defendants 10 followed a course of conduct from 1996 to 2003 that 11 involved the development and the refinement of the 12 supplement and the sale and distribution of the 13 supplement and its monitoring through the TrueHope 14 Program, and this course of conduct had been 15 accepted by Health Canada until March of 2003.

16 I am going to address for a moment when 17 considering reasonable legal alternatives and 18 whether or not the defendants took all reasonable 19 care. The issue of the argument, the issue or 20 argument, that the defendants were under a duty of 21 care to continue to provide the supplement and the 22 support program, and defence counsel had referred to 23 Section 216 and Section 217 of the Criminal Code.

24 I will just briefly refer to Section 217, it 25 says:

26
27 Everyone who undertakes to do an act

1 is under a legal duty to do it, if an 2 omission to do the act may be 3 dangerous to life.

4
5 The defendants could have been at risk of 6 criminal prosecution if they stopped providing the 7 supplement and providing the support program. They 8 had undertaken this course of conduct over the 9 course of the past several years.

10 Ignorance of the law would have afforded them
11 no excuse. The Crown had raised the fact that it 12 was not clear that they were even aware of this at 13 the time. That is fine, ignorance of the law is no 14 excuse.

15 Secondly, claiming that they had to comply with 16 a DIN regulation would not have provided them with 17 any defence.

18 And thirdly, the evidence is overwhelming that 19 the defendants considered themselves under a duty to 20 protect the health, safety and well being of the 21 thousands of persons taking the supplement, that 22 they had to continue distributing the supplement and 23 monitoring the progress of those persons through the 24 TrueHope Support Program.

25 The Crown suggested that the defendants did not 26 take all reasonable care in the circumstances. They 27 could have moved to the United States, I have dealt

1 with that argument already. The personal use
2 exemption argument or the off the shelf argument, I
3 have dealt with those arguments as well. The moving
4 to the United States, in my view, was not what a 5 reasonable person would do in the circumstances.
6 The personal use exemption or the off the shelf 7 solutions, in my view, were not reasonable legal 8 alternatives and would not have been the acts of 9 reasonable persons because they disregard the 10 necessity of tracking, monitoring and maintaining 11 persons on the support program, which I have said I 12 have found is inextricably connected to the supply 13 of the supplement.

14 The Crown also suggested that they could have 15 just waited for the new Natural Health Products 16 Directorate to be established in early 2004. That 17 is the same thing as saying, well they should have 18 just stopped selling the product, and I have already 19 indicated that I do not consider that to be a 20 reasonable legal alternative or a reasonable course 21 of action.

22 Other suggestions by the Crown was that the 23 defendants could have stopped making the treatment 24 claims or withdrawn the Boron or Germanium from the 25 supplement, however there is no evidence before the 26 Court that taking these steps were measures that 27 would have led Health Canada to change its position

1           that the defendants required a DIN.

2           The defendants took all reasonable care that 3           could have been expected of a reasonable person in 4           the circumstances to comply with the requirements of 5           Health Canada and the Food and Drugs Act and 6           Regulations.

7           The backdrop of circumstances include that it
8           was not possible for the defendants to obtain a DIN
9           for the supplement. That a new Natural Health
10          Products Directorate with an approval process suited 11          to natural health food products was about to come
12          into force. That their numerous efforts to obtain a 13          resolution to the concerns of Health Canada
14          regarding the sale and distribution of the product 15          were being largely ignored, and that the thousands 16          of individuals who had found relief from mental 17          illness through the supplement without the negative 18          side effects of conventional medications were 19          relying upon them to continue to sell and distribute 20          the product and to maintain the support program.

21          The fact that the Minister of Health in March 22          2004 made an agreement for the sale and distribution 23          of the supplement and the operation of the program 24          that continues to this present day is evidence that 25          the defendants acted reasonably in 2003 and that 26          there was no other reasonable legal alternative at 27          the time.

1           Therefore I find that the defendants took all
2 due care to comply with the Act and Regulations.
3 The defendants have established on a balance of 4 probabilities that the defendants took all
5 reasonable care to comply with the Food and Drug Act
6 and Regulations that would be expected of a 7 reasonable person in these circumstances, and are 8 therefore entitled to the defence of due diligence.

9           I turn now to the last remedy sought by the 10 defendants, and that is abuse of process. A stay of 11 proceedings for abuse of process.

12           It is established law that the defendants, to 13 obtain a stay of proceedings for an abuse of 14 process, whether by common-law doctrine or by 15 charter breach must establish on a balance of 16 probabilities that to allow the Crown to proceed 17 against the defendants would violate the community's 18 sense of fair play or decency or that the 19 proceedings would be oppressive. But it is actually 20 more than that, it is a very high threshold, it is a 21 high standard, and I will refer back to that again 22 in just a moment.

23           The defendants specifically referred to R v.
24 Jewitt and R v. Young, and in R v. Young, that case 25 spoke of a particular situation where:

26
27           The executive action, meaning

1           government action, where the 2           executive action leading to the 3           institution of proceedings is 4           offensive to the principles upon 5           which the administration of justice
6           is conducted by the Courts.

7
8           The defendants argued that in 2003
9           approximately 90 percent of the health food products 10          industry was not in compliance. Evidence was 11          presented that the DIN regulation didn't fit the 12          natural health products industry and that the 13          regulatory process itself was in a transitional 14          period with new regulations to come into force in 15          January 2004.

16          The defendants argued that since there was 17          evidence that withdrawing the supplement would cause 18          harm to the users of the supplements, the efforts of 19          Health Canada to stop the sale of the supplement in 20          2003 were an abuse of process.

21          This Court is not prepared to find that the 22          efforts of Health Canada to stop the sale of the 23          supplement in 2003 constitutes the clearest of cases 24          in order to justify a stay of proceeding for abuse
25          of process. Health Canada's efforts were directed 26          at stopping the sale and distribution of a product 27          that purported to treat mental illness. According

1 to the Food and Drug Act and Regulations in force at 2 the time the supplement was therefore technically a 3 drug which had not been tested and approved within 4 the existing regulatory scheme.

5 The defendants also argued that this 6 prosecution is an abuse of process because it is an 7 attempt to make the defendants stop selling the 8 supplement.

9 Since the charge before the Court was laid
10 after the present agreement was made by the Minister 11 of Health to permit the sale of the product and the 12 operation of the program and that the product and 13 the program continue to be available under this 14 agreement today, I do not accept that argument that 15 this prosecution is an attempt to stop the sale of 16 the product.

17 However, there is a further argument that was 18 made by the defendants and that is that commencing 19 this prosecution following the agreement with the 20 Minister was an abuse of process, and the defendants 21 referred to the case of R v. Young and argued that 22 this case, the present case, is even stronger than 23 that. The defendants argued that this case was even 24 stronger because firstly, the same branch of the 25 executive was involved, as opposed to a different 26 branch in the Young case. And secondly, that in the 27 present case an agreement had already been reached

1 to resolve the issues with the Minister and that 2 that agreement continues to today.

3 While these matters were resolved by an 4 agreement with the Minister in March 2004, which 5 continues to the present time, the fact remains that 6 in 2003 the defendants were in breach of the DIN 7 regulation and have admitted as much.

8 So is this prosecution commenced after the 9 agreement in 2004 an abuse of process amounting to 10 the clearest of cases? The Court in R v. Reagan 11 refers to the remedy being sought here as:

12

13 One where a prosecution has been 14 conducted in such a manner as to 15 connote unfairness or vexatiousness
16 of such a degree that it contravenes 17 fundamental notions of justice and 18 thus undermines the integrity of the 19 judicial process.

20

21 And further in the Reagan case at paragraph 52 22 another case is referred to in which the Supreme 23 Court of Canada stated that:

24

25 The abuse must have caused actual 26 prejudice of such magnitude that the 27 public's sense of decency and 1 fairness is affected.

2

3 The quote went on to state that:

4

5 The prejudice caused by the abuse in 6 question will be manifested, 7 perpetuated or aggravated through the 8 conduct of the trial or by its 9 outcome that no other remedy is 10 reasonably capable of removing the 11 prejudice.

12

13 Further at paragraph 55 in R v. Reagan, the 14 Supreme Court of Canada said that:

15

16 The remedy of a stay of proceedings 17 for an abuse of process must be 18 considered in the context of this 19 statement. That when dealing with an 20 abuse which falls into the residual 21 category, generally speaking, a stay
22 of proceedings is only appropriate 23 where the abuse is likely to continue 24 or to be carried forward.

25

26 That is not the case with the prosecution that 27 is before this Court. The actual prejudice is not

1 of such a magnitude nor is likely to be continued or 2 to be carried forward, in particular in view of the 3 agreement that has been in place since March of 4 2004.

5 So as I have stated, the actual prejudice is 6 not of such a magnitude, nor is it likely to be 7 continued or carried forward. The onus is on the 8 defendants in advancing this argument to satisfy the 9 Court on a balance of probabilities, not only that 10 there is an abuse of process, but that it is the 11 clearest of cases.

12 The Crown referred to R v. Reagan and R v.
13 Power in the Supreme Court of Canada and there are 14 various phrases there that talk about the extent of 15 an abuse of process and what constitutes an abuse of 16 process of such a degree as to warrant the stay of 17 proceedings in the clearest of cases.

18 One statement is that:

19
20 Conduct which shocks the conscience
21 of the community and is so
22 detrimental to the proper
23 administration of justice that it 24 warrants judicial intervention.

25
26 The Court went on at page 16 to state that:
27

1           Cases of this nature will be 2           extremely rare.

3

4           While the prosecution of the defendants was 5           commenced in 2004, after an agreement had been 6           entered into with the Minister to provide for the 7           sale and distribution of the supplement and the 8           maintenance of the program, while that prosecution 9           may amount to an abuse of process, this Court is not 10          prepared to find that the commencement of the 11          prosecution after the agreement by the Minister is 12          the clearest of cases which would entitle the 13          defendants to a stay of proceedings. The onus is on 14          the defendants on a balance of probabilities to 15          satisfy the Court that this is the clearest of cases 16          of an abuse of process in order to warrant the 17          remedy of a stay of proceedings.

18          The defendants had further arguments, however, 19          on abuse of process. The defendants argue that 20          there were other instances of conduct by 21          representatives of Health Canada that should be 22          considered as contributing to an abuse of process.
23          They included the endorsing the blind following of 24          policy where enforcement or compliance officers 25          apparently have no regard or do not consider it to 26          be any of their concern of the possible harm or 27          consequences that could arise by enforcement

1 proceedings, and they were not aware of any 2 mechanism of which such information could be brought 3 forward in Health Canada.

4 Another instance of conduct of Health Canada
5 officials that could have been considered an abuse 6 of process the defendants argued, was that the 7 Health Canada officials were not forthcoming with 8 the defendants by failing to tell them that it was 9 not possible to obtain a DIN.

10 There was also the double standard that was 11 employed once the seizures started and the 12 defendants were trying to get the supplement through 13 the border and trying to ensure access to the 14 participants in the TrueHope Program. Their 15 experiences versus the -- that they were not always 16 successful, versus the experiences of Mr. Ron 17 LaJeunesse of the Canadian Mental Health
18 Association, who testified that in every case that 19 he intervened he was successful in getting the 20 product released. A double standard.

21 Another example that the defence argues is 22 conduct amounting, or that could contribute to abuse
23 of process, was that Health Canada had its own 24 health hazard evaluation that had this product 25 described as type 2 and the possibility of harm as 26 being remote. And even when that health hazard 27 evaluation was being prepared the defendants have

1 asked to meet with Health Canada, but Health Canada 2 was reluctant to meet with the defendants, even 3 without information from the defendants, Health
4 Canada's evaluation was still that the risk of harm
5 from the use of the supplement was remote.

6 Another example that the defendants argued was 7 conduct that could lead to the finding of an abuse 8 of process was that the conduct of Health Canada was 9 forcing otherwise law abiding Canadian citizens to 10 become smugglers and break the law by smuggling the 11 supplement into Canada for their own health, safety 12 and well being, or for the health, safety and well 13 being of their family members.

14 In reply the Crown argued that neither the 15 conduct of Health Canada through 2003 nor this 16 prosecution should be seen as an abuse of process.

17 The Crown argued that there was an interim DIN
18 directive in place to assist with transitional 19 matters, there was a policy that provided for a 20 personal use exemption for individuals to obtain the 21 supplement, the fact that 90 percent of the natural 22 health product industry was not in compliance did 23 not justify the defendants' lack of compliance, 24 where the defendants were making treatment claims 25 associated with the product.

26 Health Canada had expressed other concerns with 27 regards to Boron and Germanium in the product.

1           The Court has also noted that the defendants 2 were in breach of the DIN regulation, and although 3 the Minister of Health and Health Canada were 4 approached on numerous occasions unsuccessfully by 5 the defendants, the Minister of Health and Health
6 Canada were not required by law to provide a
7 Ministerial exemption or to enter into an agreement 8 with the defendants. And while the seizures of the 9 supplement at the Canada/US border has been 10 challenged in the Federal Court of Canada and the 11 search warrant has been challenged in the Court of 12 Queen's Bench of Alberta, there have been no
13 findings that these actions taken by Health Canada
14 were not taken within the strict letter of the law.

15           While this Court is not prepared to find that 16 the various instances of the conduct by the 17 representatives of Health Canada amounted to the 18 clearest of cases of an abuse of process in order to 19 warrant a stay of proceedings, this Court does find 20 that some of the conduct would have influenced the 21 defendant's beliefs that there was no reasonable
22 legal alternative, other than to disobey the DIN
23 regulation and that the defendants had taken all 24 reasonable care in the circumstances to comply with 25 the law.

26           The defendants are therefore not guilty on 27 Count number 3 in the Information. The defendants

1 are entitled to rely upon the defence of necessity, 2 which once raised was not disproved beyond a
3 reasonable doubt by the Crown.

4 Furthermore, this being a strict liability
5 offence the defendants are entitled to the defence 6 of due diligence. On a balance of probabilities the 7 Court is satisfied that the defendants took all 8 reasonable care that would be expected of a 9 reasonable person in the circumstances, to comply 10 with the Food and Drug Act and Regulations, as 11 evidenced by their considerable efforts to obtain a 12 Ministerial exemption or agreement during 2003.

13 The findings that the defendants had no
14 reasonable legal alternative and took all reasonable 15 care to comply with the law in the circumstances are 16 support in part by the fact that by March 2004 the 17 new Minister of Health entered into an agreement to 18 permit the sale and distribution of the supplement
19 and the operation of the program, which agreement 20 continues to the present day.

21 So in those circumstances I find the defendants 22 not guilty of the offence as charged.

23 MR. BUCKLEY: Thank you, Your Honour. And 24 my understanding because this is a summary 25 conviction proceeding is that basically ends the 26 Court's jurisdiction and so our constitutional 27 obligations have also ended. That is my

1 understanding. If that is not the case --

2 THE COURT: Just before you go there.

3 MR. BUCKLEY: Okay.

4 THE COURT: Madam clerk, that is the 5 original decision, attach that to the Information.

6 THE COURT CLERK: thank you, sir.

7 THE COURT: There is two copies for the 8 Crown and two copies for the defence. All right.

9 All right, now, Mr. Buckley.

10 MR. BUCKLEY: If that is not the case, Your 11 Honour, I will advise the Court in light of the 12 decision this morning that we would be abandoning 13 our constitutional application in any event.

14 THE COURT: My understanding from previous 15 discussions with counsel was that if there had been 16 a finding of guilt on one or more of the charges
17 before the Court, then a further part of this trial
18 would then be proceeded to that would deal with I 19 believe it is a constitutional challenge on the 20 definitions within the Food and Drug Act?

21 MR. BUCKLEY: Yes.

22 THE COURT: But that in the present
23 circumstances with the finding of not guilty, that 24 you would not be proceeding further?

25 MR. BUCKLEY: Yes, that's correct.

26 MR. BROWN: Yes, that's certainly my 27 understanding as well, sir.

1 THE COURT: Is that your understanding as 2 well?

3 MR. BUCKLEY: Yes.

4 THE COURT: All right. All right, once
5 again, gentlemen, thank you for the effort that you
6 have both put into this very unique and challenging 7 trial, and your arguments that were presented were 8 thoughtful and well presented to the Court and I
9 thank you both for your efforts.

10 MR. BROWN: Thank you as well, sir.

11 THE COURT: And we will stand adjourned.

12 MR. BUCKLEY: Thank you, Your Honour.

13 THE COURT: Thank you. We will stand
14 adjourned now until 2:00 this afternoon, madam 15 clerk.

16 THE COURT CLERK: Thank you. Order in the Court
17 all rise. This Court stands adjourned until 2:00 18 p.m. this afternoon.

19 THE COURT: Thank you.

20 THE COURT CLERK: Thank you, sir.
